

The rubab is a lute-like musical instrument originating from Northern Pakistan and Afghanistan. It is made from the trunk of a mulberry tree, animal skin, and nylon. It derives its name from the Arabic word rebab, meaning “played with a bow”, but the strings are actually plucked. The rubab is known as the “lion of instruments”.