

Huipil Mexican Women's dress:

The huipil is a sleeveless tunic made of cotton or wool typically seen in Mexico and Central America. In Mexico, the huipil is used to distinguish the indigenous peoples of central and southern Mexico from those in the North. The bright designs on the garment vary, depending on the region, beliefs, marital status, etc. Huipils are part of a living legacy with profound cultural meaning. Most of the woven-in designs are sacred symbols and they represent the vast diversity of over 60 ethnic groups in Mexico.
